STAGE MASCOTS AND JONAHS.

"There are people who will tell you that superstition is dead and that in these matter-of-fact days there is neither room nor time to pay heed to the strange fancies and beliefs so commonly held many years ago," says Grace

George in the Denver Republican. "To a certain extent, perhaps, this is true, though I am inclined to think, all the same, that as far as actresses and actors are concerned superstition is still very much alive—and is thriving uncommonly well, too. Indeed, first night' superstitions on the stage are plentiful. The strangest one came under my notice last year in a certain way below grade. Some of the walks play in which I was starring. A few minutes before my 'call' I happened to be standing in the wings when I espied the leading man engaged in tearing small pieces off a corner of the scenery, wearing the while an air as if to say, I am doing a good day's work.'

"That is rather an expensive sort of amusement to the management, isn't it? I said, as I saw scenery which had taken weeks to paint being mutilated.

"'Expensive to the management? No, I'm doing them a real good turn,' replied the actor, 'for there is no more infallible way in the world of making a piece an out-and-out success than by touching up the scenery in this waybelieve me, I know.' Whether this mutilating process had anything to do with it I would not like to say, but the piece was a big success. "A well-known Shakespearean actor even to-day always hires a hunchback to sit in his dressing room on a first the site for the new school house will night. Here again, too, this curious method of wooing success has worked out well, either as cause or coincidence, for I think I am correct in saying that Thos Clapp sr, went to Montana in the last few years he has only had two financial failures. Writing to me the same day, she referred to this anonymous present, and added: 'I'm quite sure that I shall now have some good stroke of luck, for Zulu bangles are very lucky indeed.' And, sure enough, she did have a stroke of luck. She received a letter that same evening from some solicitors in New York informing her that an uncle, of whose very existence she had almost forgotten, had died suddenly, leaving her in his will the useful sum of $12,- ominously to one another. "Up and up went the balloon, and now a murmur of horror arose among the multitude. The aeronaut and the landlord were quarreling; they were fighting. High up there in the clouds, perched on the swaying trapeze, they
